C20: 1 e4 e5: Unusual White second moves Destroying the Queen Raid: It was at this point that I discovered a coffeehouse in Seattle's University District called The Last Exit on Brooklyn. The chess players who met here were far more experienced players than my usual circle of friends. It was here that my Queen Raid approach received a number of nasty setbacks. The harshest lesson was the following game, which left a deep impression.This was a big game for me. I was playing an experienced adult chess player and was anxious to prove my newfound understanding of opening play. My opening had but one aim: creating an avenue for my Queen to develop. 1.e4 e5 2.Qh5 Nc6 3.Bc4

C20: 1 e4 e5: Unusual White second moves Destroying the Queen Raid: It was at this point that I discovered a coffeehouse in Seattle's University District called The Last Exit on Brooklyn. The chess players who met here were far more experienced players than my usual circle of friends. It was here that my Queen Raid approach received a number of nasty setbacks. The harshest lesson was the following game, which left a deep impression.This was a big game for me. I was playing an experienced adult chess player and was anxious to prove my newfound understanding of opening play. My opening had but one aim: creating an avenue for my Queen to develop. 1.e4 e5 2.Qh5 Nc6 3.Bc4

C20: 1 e4 e5: Unusual White second moves Destroying the Queen Raid: It was at this point that I discovered a coffeehouse in Seattle's University District called The Last Exit on Brooklyn. The chess players who met here were far more experienced players than my usual circle of friends. It was here that my Queen Raid approach received a number of nasty setbacks. The harshest lesson was the following game, which left a deep impression.This was a big game for me. I was playing an experienced adult chess player and was anxious to prove my newfound understanding of opening play. My opening had but one aim: creating an avenue for my Queen to develop. 1.e4 e5 2.Qh5 Nc6 3.Bc4

C20: 1 e4 e5: Unusual White second moves Destroying the Queen Raid: It was at this point that I discovered a coffeehouse in Seattle's University District called The Last Exit on Brooklyn. The chess players who met here were far more experienced players than my usual circle of friends. It was here that my Queen Raid approach received a number of nasty setbacks. The harshest lesson was the following game, which left a deep impression.This was a big game for me. I was playing an experienced adult chess player and was anxious to prove my newfound understanding of opening play. My opening had but one aim: creating an avenue for my Queen to develop. 1.e4 e5 2.Qh5 Nc6 3.Bc4

C20: 1 e4 e5: Unusual White second moves

Before moving on to Chapter Two, I'd like to share the following game. During the time I spent writing this book, I received the June 1998 issue of 'Northwest Chess', the monthly publication for the Washington and Oregon State Chess Federations, which reported on the 1998 National Elementary Championships that had been held in April. National Chess Master Carl Haessler, who has been successfully teaching chess to scholastic players for years, accompanied several of his students to the 1998 Nationals and shared their successes and sorrows. Carl's report featured the following game. 1.e4 e5 2.Qh5 Nf6 3.Qxe5+ Be7 4.Nc3

□ Beating The Move Checkmate

■ N,N

[John Emms]

I expect (hope!) that all of you, by now, have learned a way to stop the four-move checkmate, but don't skip to Chapter One just yet. What we are really interested in here is the best way to stop it, and this is because it teaches us something vital about good opening play. Let's have a closer look at the moves:

C20: 1 e4 e5: Unusual White second moves

1.e4 e5 2.Qh5 The queen attacks three pawns, but for the moment it only threatens the unguarded pawn on e5.

2...Nc6! Black defends the e5-pawn and develops a knight at the same time.

3.Bc4 Now both the queen and the bishop attack the f7-pawn, so White threatens to give checkmate with Qxf7. Black has a few ways to defend against the threat. For example, we could defend the f-pawn a second time with 3... Qe7, 3...Qf6 or even 3...Nh6. However, the ideal choice is: 3...g6! Not only does this move prevent the checkmate by blocking the queen's path to f7, it attacks the queen too! --- TIP: Be alert to moves which achieve more than one task. Here 4...g6 defends against a threat and also creates a threat. 4.Qf3 The queen retreats but still attacks the pawn on f7, so Black is faced with the threat of Qxf7 mate for a second time. Again, there are a few ways to defend, but the best option is: 4...Nf6! Black blocks the threat of checkmate and develops the other knight to its best square - another dual-purpose move. --- At this stage White should abandon any ideas of checkmate and begin developing some new pieces. A good start would be 5 Ne2, getting ready to castle kingside. Let's see what could happen if White fails to do this and instead continues to attack: 5.g4? White's idea is to threaten the knight by moving the pawn to g5. If the knight then moves, Qxf7 is checkmate. Unfortunately for White, this isn't going to happen! 5...Nd4! Suddenly Black is the one who is creating the threats. The knight attacks the white queen, but there's also a threat of ...Nxc2+, forking the king and rook. So White's queen has to move and defend the c2-pawn. 6.Qd1 Things have gone horribly wrong for White. The queen has already moved three times and yet she is now back on her starting square! Black could simply capture the pawn on e4 with the knight on f6, but let's continue the theme of developing with threats: 6...d5! Black threatens the bishop on c4, the pawn on e4, and something else too. Can you see what it is?

[Don't do 6...Nxe4 7.Nc3 Nc5 8.Bf1-+]

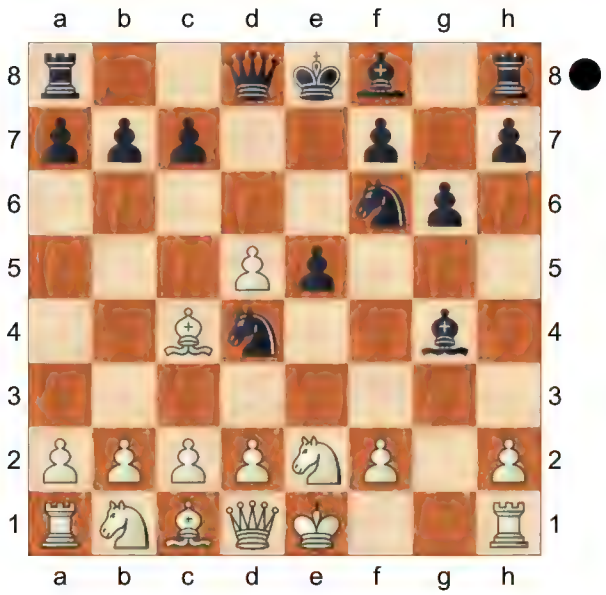
7.exd5N -4.77/22

[⌓7.Be2 -3.27/18]

[7.Bxd5 Bxg4 8.f3 Nxd5 9.fxg4 Qh4+ Chapter-Game Chapter 2 Game 5]

7...Bxg4! This was Black's third threat. Moving the d-pawn freed the bishop on c8 and created a discovered attack on the g4-pawn. Now there's a yet another attack on the poor queen. The queen can't move to a safe square so the only option is to block the attack. White's position is already very bad, but if White chooses to block with the knight it gets even worse: 8.Ne2? -#2/15

[8.f3-+ -3.79/20 Bf5 9.d3]



EXERCISE: Black can now force checkmate in two moves. Can you see how we do this? --- ANSWER: 8...Nf3+! White's king has only one square to go to. 9.Kf1 Bh3#! . An amazing end to the game, with the bishop and knight combining beautifully as a team to checkmate the white king. It's difficult to believe that just a few moves ago it was White threatening checkmate! --- What Black did so well in this example was to stop White's primitive plan by playing natural and active developing moves, and by doing so Black was able to create his own threats and force White to retreat. --- In summary, when we learn the best way to deal with the four-move checkmate, and how to beat White's crude attack afterwards with 5 g4?, we also learn some key guidelines which help us to choose moves in all openings: 1) Develop your pieces as quickly as possible. --- 2) Defend against threats by playing natural developing moves. --- 3) Search for developing moves which achieve more than one goal. Dual-purpose moves are good, and triple-purpose moves are even better! --- 4) Search for developing moves which create threats. Single threats gain time, and double threats may gain pieces! --- Keeping those guidelines in mind, let's move on to our first opening... White got outplayed after the opening.

Yasser Seirawan: 'Before moving on to Chapter Two, I'd like to share the following game. During the time I spent writing this book, I received the June 1998 issue of 'Northwest Chess', the monthly publication for the Washington and Oregon State Chess Federations, which reported on the 1998 National Elementary Championships that had been held in April. National Chess Master Carl Haessler, who has been successfully teaching chess to scholastic players for years, accompanied several of his students to the 1998 Nationals and shared their successes and sorrows. C20: 1 e4 e5: Unusual White second moves

Queen Raid: After determining that my cannon-fire ideas weren't doing the job, a careful rethink of my opening approach was necessary. This was a critical phase of my chess development. It seemed that chess was far too difficult for my poor mind. Was trying to get better worth getting stomped by my friends?All chess players at one time in their very early career are struck by this telling question. Many decide that, indeed, chess isn't their shtick. Fortunately for me, a serendipitous outside influence played a crucial role at this phase in my development. My interest was rekindled when America's own Robert James (Bobby) Fischer defeated the Soviet Union's Boris Spassky for the World Chess Championship in 1972. It was a heady moment for chess players around the world, and for American chess players in particular.While most Americans were undoubtedly proud of their new champion, I had a question: 'How could Bobby be champion? He didn't beat me!'Renewing myself, I applied the formidable powers of my young mind to my opening strategy. Carefully penetrating the mysterious veil of the chess pieces, I deduced something wonderful and extraordinary: My Queen is the most powerful piece on the board!My fault had been not to develop it quickly enough. How simple and obvious: My Queen was a natural-born bully! All that was necessary was to introduce it into the game as early as possible.This faulty strategy is one of the most insidious pitfalls in chess! I fell into it headlong, as every untrained beginner has done! The problem, dear reader, is simply this: The Queen Raid strategy worked! My results against my circle of chess friends immediately improved. Two early examples of victorious play convinced me that I was on the right track.This game begins with a good opening move - played with the completely wrong strategy in mind. The intention should be to grab control of the center, not to make room for my Queen! Controlling the center certainly wasn't my intention. 1.e4 e5 2.Qh5 g6

I expect (hope!) that all of you, by now, have learned a way to stop the four-move checkmate, but don't skip to Chapter One just yet. What we are really interested in here is the best way to stop it, and this is because it teaches us something vital about good opening play. Let's have a closer look at the moves: 1.e4 0.15 e5 0.17 2.Qh5 0.31 Qe7N 0.04

National Elementary Championships 1998 [Yasser Seirawan]

Before moving on to Chapter Two, I'd like to share the following game. During the time I spent writing this book, I received the June 1998 issue of 'Northwest Chess', the monthly publication for the Washington and Oregon State Chess Federations, which reported on the 1998 National Elementary Championships that had been held in April. National Chess Master Carl Haessler, who has been successfully teaching chess to scholastic players for years, accompanied several of his students to the 1998 Nationals and shared their successes and sorrows. Carl's report featured the following game.

C20: 1 e4 e5: Unusual White second moves
1.e4 e5 2.Qh5 I look at this move with a knowing smile of understanding. How exciting! Will Black see the threat to the e5-pawn? 2...Nf6? No, the threat is overlooked! As I've previously demonstrated, there is no reason not to protect the e5-pawn.

Played in the spirit of the raiding Queen opening, White makes threats as quickly as possible. 6...Nxe5?? 0.89/18
This mistake costs a Knight. 7.Qxe5± Things are certainly going in White's favor. He has now won a piece and enjoys a winning position. All of this in only seven moves! Be2 is the strong threat. aiming for Be2. 7...d6 2.25/19
Undeterred by the early setback of material loss, Black continues by developing a pawn with tempo. Unfortunately, this move has a drawback: The e7-Bishop is locked in behind Black's f6-Knight and d6-pawn.

This is important because the only open file in the position is the e-file and the e7-Bishop is therefore misplaced. A Rook belongs on the e-file!

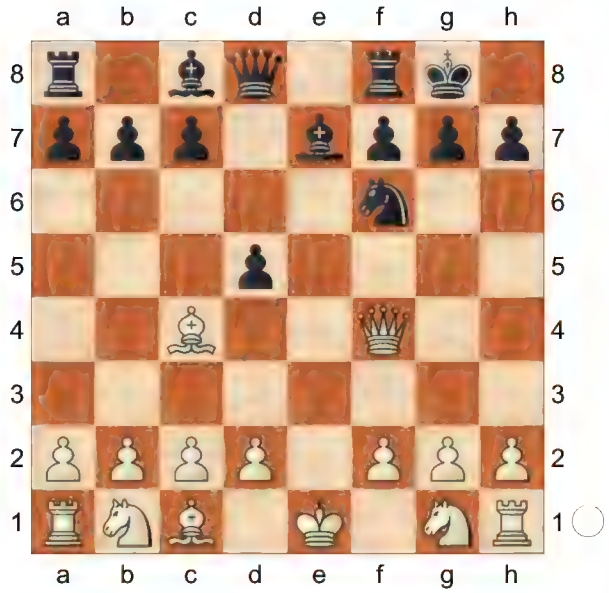
[Stronger therefore is 7...d5! , attacking White's Bishop. After. Strongly threatening ...Bd6! And now ...Bd6! would win. 8.Be2! Black must now prevent d3. Bd6! 1.91/19 White's Queen is forced to move yet again. In this case, Black is coordinating her pawns and pieces and is beginning to get some play for the lost piece. (8...Re8± 1.34/17*; 8...Re8±* 1.08/18 )]

[7...Re8± 1.11/24 8.Be2 d5]

[7...d5± 0.98/24]

8.Qf4+- White is clearly better. White is clearly better. 8...Ng4? 3.21/20

[As pointed out before, a stronger move is 8...d5!



And now ...Bd6! would win. Hoping for ...Bd6! 9.Be2! Bd6 , developing Black's forces with gain of time.]

[⌓8...d5 2.27/19]

(Diagram)

The idea behind the move is to play 9... Bg5, attacking White's Queen. 9.h4? 1.74/20 This looks like the start of a bad idea. Is White combining a Queen Raid and a Cannon Opening? Dodges Bg5

9...Ne5? 3.34/20

[9...Bxh4 1.89/19 is a better defense. 10.g3 Bg5]

[9...Bxh4 1.74/20 was called for. 10.g3 Bg5]

10.h5? 1.44/19 This continues to waste time pursuing an attack that is going nowhere.

[Again, 10.Nf3 is the correct move. White's wasted moves allow Black to get back into the game.]

[10.Nc3+- 3.32/20]

[10.Nc3+- 3.34/20]

10...Nxc4?! 2.84/18 Although it's not a bad move, if's not the best.

[Black could make White's position uncomfortable by attacking White's Queen with 10...Bg5! . The Queen is forced to move and to still lend protection to the c4-Bishop. After 11.Qe4 Hoping for Be2. Black must now prevent Be2. Re8 , the e-file has been cleared with tempo and Black has developed some threats.]

[10...Bg5± 1.41/17 was called for. 11.Qe4 Re8]
[10...Bg5± 1.44/19 11.Qe4 Re8]
11.Qxc4 Be6 A fine move. While Black has mixed good and bad moves, young Allison has a fine understanding of attacking White's Queen while developing her pawns and pieces. Still, it must be pointed out that the e6-Bishop's new station occupies the e-file.
[Once again the move 11...d5! should have been preferred.]
12.Qc3 White continues to flounder. The Queen is getting bumped around pretty severely.
[It would have been better to get out of the way by 12.Qa4]
[or play 12.Qb5 with a potential capture of the b7-pawn. This latter move could have been expected as it neatly fits the concept of the Queen Raid. White might have been attracted to 12.Qc3? because in combination with the move h5-h6, a checkmating threat against the g7-pawn would have been created.]
12...Bf6! Black is on a roll! She attacks White's Queen yet again. 13.Qd3 White is losing valuable time.
[He should play 13.d4 , blocking the threat to his Queen and releasing his c1-Bishop for action.]
13...Re8! With another fine move, Black brings her Rook to the open e-file and creates a tactical threat. ...Bc4+ would now be deadly. ...Bc4+ is the strong threat. 14.h6?? -4.15/19 Filled with dreams of glory, White is oblivious to Black's threat.
[White should develop with 14.Ne2 , blocking the e-file. The text move is typical of inexperienced players who concentrate only on what they are doing - not what the opponent might be thinking.]
[14.Kf1+- 2.65/17 and life is good for White.]
[14.Kf1+- 2.39/18 avoids the disaster.]
14...Bf5+! A shocking double attack, the 'discovered check' by the e8-Rook doesn't allow the capture of the f5-Bishop. White is forced to lose his Queen. A strong pair of Bishops. This pair of bishops is nice.
[14...Bxa2+? 3.51/20 14...Bc4+ -4.14 loses. 15.Ne2 Bxb1 16.hxg7 (16.Rxb1 g6+-) 16...Bxg7 17.Qxh7+ (17.Rxb1 h6+-) 17...Kf8 Threatens to win with ...Qe7! 18.Rxb1+-]

15.Qe2 Rxe2+ 16.Nxe2 g6
. Black won the game in 39 moves. --- Many lessons can be drawn from the above game fragment: Beginning players enjoy using their big guns, their Queens and Rooks, early - often to the exclusion of all the other pieces. --- The Queen Raid is effective when threats are overlooked. --- Against a proper defense, the Queen is vulnerable to attack and is often left stranded.

C20: 1 e4 e5: Unusual White second moves

Sasikiran,K: 'Inf 93/229' 1.e4 e5 2.Qh5 I didn't want to cover this silly move, but did so in order to make all the readers feel that we've got everything covered. Nakamura played it on a few occasions, but that doesn't mean anything: he could go 1. h4 or 1. a4 and win as well, simply because he is a better player. In fact, this just loses a lot of time.

[2.d4 exd4

A) 3.c3 d5 It's possible to take on c3, but why would you do that if there is a simple way to solve all of our problems ?

A1) 4.exd5 Qxd5 5.Nf3 doesn't make sense as after 5...Nc6 6. cxd4 it would just transpose. 5.cxd4 Nc6 6.Nf3 Bg4 A1a) 7.Be2 Bb4+ 8.Nc3 Bxf3 9.Bxf3 Qc4 The key move - White cannot castle.

A1a1) 10.Qb3 Qxd4 Gives White a strong initiative after Be3 ! and Rd1. Odd 2nd Moves and Scotch Gambi-Scotch Gambit,o (10...Qxb3 11.axb3 We have reached a balanced endgame where White needs to be careful. Nge7 12.Be3 0-0-0 Black attacks the d4-pawn. Keep in mind that the Black a7-pawn is also hanging, don't forget to defend it ! 13.0-0 Both a6 and a5 look good to me here. It's not too important which move you choose, but I like a6 !? better as it is making sure this pawn will stay protected. a6 The position is very solid and suitable to play for a win. We have no weaknesses and White's bishop pair isn't particularly useful, while he needs to keep a close eye on his weak d4-pawn. Our next moves are Rhe8 and Nf5. Odd 2nd Moves and Scotch Gambi-Scotch Gambit,o ); A1a2) 10.Bxc6+ bxc6 Now it's desirable not to allow White to castle, so Black takes with the pawn. 11.Qe2+ Qxe2+ 12.Kxe2 0-0-0 13.Be3 Ne7 The endgame is roughly balanced - White has a weak pawn on d4 while Black has a great outpost on d5, but Black's queenside pawns are somewhat loose. We will play Rhe8 followed by Nf5 or Nd5. Odd 2nd Moves and Scotch Gambi-Scotch Gambit,o; A1b) 7.Nc3 Now 7...Bb4 8. Be2 is a direct transposition to the mainline. Odd 2nd Moves and Scotch Gambi-Scotch Gambit,o;

A2) 4.Qxd4 Is a weird move, White will lose a lot of time with his queen. 4...dxe4 5.Qxe4+ Be7 Preparing Nf6. 6.Bg5 Nd7 Nf6 without Nd7 wouldn't be good because of Bxf6 ! 7.Nf3 Ngf6 With a clear advantage - the position is symmetrical and White is behind in development. Odd 2nd Moves and Scotch Gambi-Scotch Gambit,o;

B) 3.Qxd4 It is well-known that Black has a good game here. There is no need to come up with striking novelties, well-known solution will do just fine. It is well-known that Black has a good game here. Fortunately, in such a rare/innocent line you can use well-known solutions. It is not necessary to come up with striking novelties. Nc6 4.Qe3 White's main idea in this variation is to quickly develop with Nc3, Bd2, O-O-O, Qg3 and then search for an attack. However, one simple line for Black questions all of this. The main idea of this variation for White is to develop fast by playing Nc3, Bd2, castle long, put the queen on g3 and then get some attacking ideas. However, one simple line for Black puts all this under a question. Nf6 5.Nc3 Bb4 6.Bd2 0-0 7.0-0-0 Re8
So far everything was forced - both sides were just developing. Now Black is taking aim on the e4-pawn. So far everything was forced - both sides were just developing. Now Black is keeping an eye on the e4-pawn.

B1) 8.Qg3 Nxe4 9.Nxe4 Rxe4

B1a) 10.c3 This is the main line in this variation, if anything can even be considered to be a main line in such an offbeat opening. Be7 There is one fine point which you'd rather remember. There is one fine point though which you'd rather remember. 11.Bd3 Now it's possible to retreat, but the key move that gives us great play is (11.f4 d5 12.Bd3 And now it's crucial to learn the following strong idea. Bf5 13.Bxe4 Bxe4
Instead of retreating, we pay a small material price and seize the initiative ourselves ! White's king and the b1-h7 diagonal are both quite weak, making Black clearly the stronger side here. One idea I want to point out is Qd7, Bg6 and Qf5 after which White will have a hard time defending against the mating threats. Odd 2nd Moves and Scotch Gambi-Scotch Gambit,o )
11...Bh4 12.Qf3 Re8
And Black is doing great. The White knight on g1 feels pretty bad. We play d6, Qf6 and Be6. That's it ! Odd 2nd Moves and Scotch Gambi-Scotch Gambit, o;

B1b) 10.Bxb4 Nxb4 11.a3 Nc6 12.Bd3 Re8 It is unclear why White would give up the pawn in this position, but White sometimes plays this with hopes of quickly developing. 13.Nf3 d6 14.Rhe1 White is trying to trade Black's developed pieces, claiming that he can get some attacking chances due to having all of the active pieces in the game. I would suggest a calm defensive move. h6 Taking control of the g5-square. We continue with Be6 and Qf6, after which I don't see any compensation for White. Odd 2nd Moves and Scotch Gambi-Scotch Gambit, o;

B2) 8.f3 Runs into a typical idea. 8...d5 When Black immediately gets a big advantage. Odd 2nd Moves and Scotch Gambi-Scotch Gambit,o;

C) 3.Nf3 Nc6 Is a direct transposition to the Scotch Game after 4. Nxd4. However, it is also worth taking a look at the Scotch Gambit, which arises after 4. Bc4. 4.Bc4 Bc5 I like this move better than 4... Nf6 for the purposes of our repertoire, because after 4... Nf6 5.e5 we end up in the Two Knights variation of Italian, which we don't play. There it arises after 3. Bc4 Nf6 4. d4 ed 5. e5.

C1) 5.0-0 White might hope for 5... Nf6, which transposes to one of the Italian gambits which we don't play. After 5... d6 ! White isn't going to get that transposition, and neither is he getting the pawn back. d6 6.c3 Now it's possible to capture on c3, but I like the following moves even better. Bg4 Now 7.cxd4 Nxd4 is simply horrible for White, but he has the following forcing attempt. 7.Qb3 Bxf3 8.Bxf7+ Kf8 9.gxf3 Black shouldn't worry about the fact that he lost a pawn on f7 and with it the right to castle, because White's king is permanently weak and our development is great. dxc3 If White instead took 10.bxc3, trying to cover the d4-square, we would find another route to come visit the White king - 10...Ne5! This is the most forcing solution. 10.Nxc3 (10.Bxg8 Rxg8 11.Nxc3 Qd7 With a great position. Our king isn't weak at all, while White has a weakened king and a lot of weak squares, such as d4. Odd 2nd Moves and Scotch Gambi-Scotch Gambit,o ) 10...Nd4 Wins immediately for Black, because both the f3-pawn and the f7-bishop are attacked. 11.Qc4 Nxf3+ 12.Kg2 Ne5 And Black wins the bishop. Odd 2nd Moves and Scotch Gambi-Scotch Gambit,o;

C2) 5.c3 Nf6 Is a direct transposition to the Italian with 4. c3 Nf6 5. d4. Odd 2nd Moves and Scotch Gambi-Scotch Gambit,o]

2...Nc6 3.Bc4 g6 4.Qf3 Nf6

And Black is already ahead in development. The White queen on f3 also makes it difficult to find a good square for the White knight. 5.Ne2 Bg7 6.Nbc3 d6 7.d3 And now I would suggest taking the White bishop.

C20: 1 e4 e5: Unusual White second moves
MH: 'C20: 1 e4 e5: Unusual White second moves' 1.e4 e5 I have a hard time believing in moving a pawn one square like 1... e6, 1... c6, 1... g6, etc. The center is there, fight for it! Don't overdo it with something crazy like 1... d5 or 1... Nf6, of course. Now that I've made some friends, let me give you my list of good black openings against 1. e4 to make some more: • The Berlin • The Marshall • The Petroff • The Sveshnikov • The Najdorf • The Open Spanish I'm very curious at what point in the future that list will look completely outdated. If you feel it looks insane already and would like to write a strongly worded letter in defense of the Breyer, the Zaitsev, The Kalashnikov, the Taimanov or the Dragon, please send your complaints to MrDodgyatchessable.com. Now sometimes, these 'good openings' will not be your best option to play for a win. Fighting for the center, especially with black, will often mean early confrontation there that can lead to either simplification or forced lines making it harder for your opponents to make mistakes. The art of tolerating a slightly worse position after e.g. 1... g6 in order to improve our average score in that game has never been a specialty of mine. One could argue that even if playing one of my 'good openings' is not always the mathematically best choice but spending time learning and playing them will build sound chess habits that will make us stronger chess players. For me, discovering 1... e5 and giving up the openings of my youth like the Taimanov and the Modern was eye-opening, life seemed so much easier! Sold? Ok, let's memorize some draws! 1.e4 e5 I have a hard time believing in moving a pawn one square like 1... e6, 1... c6, 1... g6, etc. The center is there, fight for it! Don't overdo it with something crazy like 1... d5 or 1... Nf6, of course. Now that I've made some friends, let me give you my list of good black openings against 1. e4 to make some more: • The Berlin • The Marshall • The Petroff • The Sveshnikov • The Najdorf • The Open Spanish I'm very curious at what point in the future that list will look completely outdated. If you feel it looks insane already and would like to write a strongly worded letter in defense of the Breyer, the Zaitsev, The Kalashnikov, the Taimanov or the Dragon, please send your complaints to MrDodgyatchessable.com. Now sometimes, these 'good openings' will not be your best option to play for a win. Fighting for the center, especially with black, will often mean early confrontation there that can lead to either simplification or forced lines making it harder for your opponents to make mistakes. The art of tolerating a slightly worse position after e.g. 1... g6 in order to improve our average score in that game has never been a specialty of mine. One could argue that even if playing one of my 'good openings' is not always the mathematically best choice but spending time learning and playing them will build sound chess habits that will make us stronger chess players. For me, discovering 1... e5 and giving up the openings of my youth like the Taimanov and the Modern was eye-opening, life seemed so much easier! Sold? Ok, let's memorize some draws! (Kidding - kind of.) 2.Qh5 It is about time we learn how to parry that Scholar's Mate! 2...Nc6

Destroying the Queen Raid: It was at this point that I discovered a coffeehouse in Seattle's University District called The Last Exit on Brooklyn. The chess players who met here were far more experienced players than my usual circle of friends. It was here that my Queen Raid approach received a number of nasty setbacks. The harshest lesson was the following game, which left a deep impression. --- This was a big game for me. I was playing an experienced adult chess player and was anxious to prove my newfound understanding of opening play. My opening had but one aim: creating an avenue for my Queen to develop.
C20: 1 e4 e5: Unusual White second moves
1.e4 e5 Black responds with the 'Classical King Pawn Defense'. I didn't know the defense had a name, but it was a standard counter in my circle of friends. 2.Qh5? Of course I was very happy to play this mistake, allowing my Queen to immediately begin its attack. Naturally, I'm poised to grab Black's e5-pawn. 2...Nc6 This reaction put the brakes to my plan. Black easily defends my one and only threat. It was time to create another. 3.Bc4 White threatens 4. Qxf7, which is well known as the 'Scholar's Mate'. The term wasn't known to me, but the threat certainly was! How would my experienced opponent react? 3...g6! In a good move, Black blocks my threat to the f7-pawn and attacks my Queen as well. Undeterred, I retreat my Queen and renew the same threat. 4.Qf3 Thus far I was very proud of my play. Aggressive from the start, I had held the initiative and was really taking the game to my opponent! Surely he felt the same way too? 4...Nf6! Black calmly blocks my threat to the f7-pawn and develops another piece. Now I fully concentrated to find something creative. After some intense thought, I found a nifty idea. 5.Qb3N As I was about to discover, this was a mistake. At the time, I really liked this move because it fit perfectly with my newfound knowledge. The f7-pawn is attacked yet again - how brilliant I am! - and my Queen is perfectly positioned to grab the b7-pawn if opportunity allows. Yes indeed, things are really going my way!

5...Nd4! Black's excellent response is one my young mind didn't appreciate. Of course Black's Knight attacks my Queen, but my opponent apparently hadn't realized my threat so I eagerly seize the opportunity to capture a pawn with check.

[Stronger than 5...Nxe4 6.Bxf7+ Ke7 7.Nf3±]

6.Bxf7+ I was certainly proud of this move. My opponent is forced to move his King, I'm a pawn up, and I'd be victorious after just a few more stern moves. I was a bit perplexed that my esteemed opponent was not perturbed by the need to move his King. 6...Ke7

7.Qc4

[In the far recesses of my mind a doubt appeared. I was surprised that I didn't have an immediate checkmate. What a pity that 7.Qe6+? -8.88/16 7.Qc4 -3.24 isn't checkmate! In that case, either the d7-pawn or the d4-Knight would capture my Queen.]

[My first idea was to play 7.Qb4+ . (My second check in a row! I would be on a roll.) But after Kxf7 , I'd lose my Bishop and my Queen would be under attack.]

7...b5! Where did this unexpected move come from? Wasn't I the one making all the threats? Black's move attacking my Queen forces me to give up the protection of my Bishop.

[Weaker is 7...Nxe4 8.Bd5∓]

8.Qc5+ -5.02/17

[8.Qd3 -3.40/16 might work better. Kxf7 9.c3]

8...Kxf7-+ I was very sorry to see the capture of my valiant Bishop. After all, this Bishop had forced Black's King to move.

[Now my hand faltered. I had intended to grab Black's e5-pawn when my attention was drawn to my c2-pawn. My goodness! After 8...Kxf7 9.Qxe5 Nxc2+ 10.Kd1 Nxa1 , my King will have been checked and I would lose a Rook.]

9.Qc3

A rather painful retreat, but I couldn't allow the capture of the c2-pawn and my Queen had to move. 9...Bb4! Decoy

10.Qd3

[10.Qg3 Nxc2+]

10...d5! At last, a mistake! My opponent has missed my threat of c2-c3 forking Bishop and Knight. Now I'd get the chance to win back the piece I'd lost. Finally, for the last time, my hand faltered yet again. Surely my crafty opponent would not overlook losing a piece? Right that was the trick! Black's last move introduces the threat of 11... dxe4, winning a pawn, and worse, attacking my Queen yet again! 11.exd5 Fearful of 11...dxe4, I couldn't allow my pawn to be captured. I still had my ambitions. Given the chance, the move c2-c3 would win back my piece. 11...Bf5! I couldn't believe what had just happened. With another fine attacking move, my Queen was again under attack and had to move. My game is terrible. Black's pieces are buzzing about the board and all I have developed is my Queen. The Queen, which I thought was a bully, was getting pushed around. With a heavy heart I abandoned the defense of my c2-pawn and accepted the loss of a Rook. Skewer, Deflection 12.Qg3

I recall being quite proud of this move.
[I realized that 12.Qe3 Nxc2+ would fork my King and Queen. Unblinking, my opponent immediately attacked my Queen yet again!]
12...Nh5!
[I couldn't believe my opponent had resisted the temptation to play 12...Nxc2+ , which I evaluated as winning. So why this move? Once again my Queen would have to move, but where? Take a look at the position after the text move and you'll realize my discomfort. Nearly all the squares available to my Queen are guarded!]
13.Qxe5 I avoid stepping into the same ...Nd4xc2+ Knight fork, and I console myself with the thought that I have wiped out a pawn. I saw Black's next move but there was nothing I could do. 13...Re8! By pinning my Queen to my King, the cannon had never seemed more powerful! Knowing my Queen was lost, I captured the Rook. 14.Qxe8+ Qxe8+ What a disaster! My Queen is captured and my King is checked. Flustered by the suddenness of my losing position, I found my last bad move. 15.Kd1! Bxc2#
. My experienced opponent didn't bother to announce checkmate and instead left it to me to find a move. With my hand on my King and a puzzled expression, I tried moving my King to a few squares. When I couldn't find a square, I looked at my opponent. He gave me a knowing smile and then said, "Checkmate." --- This game left me shaking my head. After I returned home, I went over the game very carefully and came to some startling conclusions: Instead of being a bully, my Queen had actually been chased around the board, having to respond to every threat against it. --- While my opponent was developing his forces, I was falling behind. The final position was a forceful reminder of how lopsided the victory was. Not a single White piece had been developed. I had played 15 moves and nearly all my pieces were on their original squares. The only two pieces that had managed to make it into the game, my Queen and Bishop, had been captured. --- This sparked a whole new way of thinking and I discovered another principle: While an early Queen Raid against a beginner is effective, a Queen Raid will not work against an experienced opponent who knows how to coordinate pieces. --- Chess coaches all over the world understand this truism! Beginners are very vulnerable to Queen Raids. Once they learn how to coordinate their pieces and pawns and ward off an early Queen Raid, the strategy fails. The early development of the Queen is a detriment for the other pieces and the strategy boomerangs against the raider. White did not feel at home in the position after the opening.

Queen Raid: After determining that my cannon-fire ideas weren't doing the job, a careful rethink of my opening approach was necessary. This was a critical phase of my chess development. It seemed that chess was far too difficult for my poor mind. Was trying to get better worth getting stomped by my friends? --- All chess players at one time in their very early career are struck by this telling question. Many decide that, indeed, chess isn't their shtick. Fortunately for me, a serendipitous outside influence played a crucial role at this phase in my development. My interest was rekindled when America's own Robert James (Bobby) Fischer defeated the Soviet Union's Boris Spassky for the World Chess Championship in 1972. It was a heady moment for chess players around the world, and for American chess players in particular. --- While most Americans were undoubtedly proud of their new champion, I had a question: "How could Bobby be champion? He didn't beat me!" --- Renewing myself, I applied the formidable powers of my young mind to my opening strategy. Carefully penetrating the mysterious veil of the chess pieces, I deduced something wonderful and extraordinary: My Queen is the most powerful piece on the board! --- My fault had been not to develop it quickly enough. How simple and obvious: My Queen was a natural-born bully! All that was necessary was to introduce it into the game as early as possible. --- This faulty strategy is one of the most insidious pitfalls in chess! I fell into it headlong, as every untrained beginner has done! The problem, dear reader, is simply this: The Queen Raid strategy worked! My results against my circle of chess friends immediately improved. Two early examples of victorious play convinced me that I was on the right track. --- This game begins with a good opening move - played with the completely wrong strategy in mind. The intention should be to grab control of the center, not to make room for my Queen! Controlling the center certainly wasn't my intention.

C20: 1 e4 e5: Unusual White second moves

1.e4 e5 This is the classical answer and a good move. Even beginners occasionally find good moves! 2.Qh5? This was my "new and improved" idea. As the new neighborhood bully, my Queen would knock heads together. 2...g6N My opponent seizes the opportunity to attack my Queen, but overlooks my real threat.

3.Qxe5+ Simply brilliant! My Queen spears Black's position. Now Black's cannon (Rook) will be eaten. 3...Qe7 Black copies my plan of bringing out the Queen. My turn! 4.Qxh8 My Queen happily munches the trapped Rook. 4...Qxe4+ What's this? The capture presents danger, but I can block the check and my Rook is safe. 5.Ne2 With this good move, I develop a piece and block the check. 5...Qxc2 (?) What a sly devil my opponent is! Now he is conducting his own raid. My goodness, how do I defend the threat of 6... Qxc1 Checkmate? A sudden panic overcomes me, followed by a sigh of relief. No! My brilliant fifth move with my Knight protects my c1-Bishop! Happily, I continue my own raid. 6.Qxg8 In a greedy (and good, I might add) move, a mighty Knight is slaughtered. My marauding Queen is picking apart Black's army. Isn't chess easy and fun? I'm sure such gleeful thoughts were printed on my face. 6...Nc6 Black makes a good move and develops a piece. Now, at this position I had a real think about what to do next. --- By this time I was experienced enough to make a realization. I had a won position! I've grabbed enough loot - a Rook and a Knight - to have a big edge. Do I need to win more material? The h7-pawn is a very tempting grab as my raid 'on the Kingside' would be completed. However, Black's Queen is quite worrying and I must pay attention so that I don't blow my win. Resisting my strong inclination to play 7.Qxh7, I instead decide to attack Black's raiding Queen. 7.Na3! In another surprisingly good move, and without understanding what I was doing, I've developed a Knight with tempo. That is, I mobilize one of my pieces and attack Black's Queen at the same time. The realization that "Black's Queen will have to move because I've attacked the Queen!" planted a seed that would take root and grow. This seed would lead me to reevaluate my new Queen strategy.

[7.Qxh7 Nb4 8.Nec3 (8.Qh3 Nd3+⩲) 8...Qxc1+ 9.Ke2 c6±]

7...Qa4 This is a move I could fully understand and appreciate. Beginners like myself who have discovered the Queen strategy try to throw the Queen right into the middle of the battle. When the Queen is attacked, my natural reaction is to return the favor at once! As my Knight attacks Black's Queen, the Queen responds by attacking my White Knight. Just what I would do! My admiration for my opponent's play was growing. --- I looked at the captured pieces to restore my confidence. I'm still a Rook and Knight ahead! I love what has just taken place. I've gobbled up nearly half of my opponent's army and I had just attacked Black's Queen. It felt so good that I only considered two moves: taking the h7-pawn or the move I chose. 8.b3! Inhibits d5.

[Playing 8.Qxh7 was nearly irresistible. But attacking Black's Queen had brought such pleasure previously, I just couldn't resist. This time, the thought behind the move was correct. My c1-Bishop protects the Knight and the Black Queen is given another boot.]

8...Qb4 Black tries to keep his Queen as close to the action as possible. Once more my opponent had completed the very move I would have played. At this stage of my chess career, I rarely saw more than one move ahead. My move always seemed to be spur of the moment and at this moment I was on a roll. Black's Queen has had to 'react' to my previous moves. Without hesitation I plunked down my next move. 9.Nc2? What joy, attacking Black's Queen again! My pieces are being brought into play and the game is won.

[With the benefit of 25 years' hindsight, 9.Nc4 is a far better move.]

9...Qc5 I thought this move to be an excellent retort because it follows the reasoning, "When attacked, counter with an attack of your own." In fact, this move just loses.

[While Black is quite lost because of his material deficit, a better choice is 9...Qe4 to get out of harm's way. --- After the text move we come to one of the proudest moments of my early career: my first 'combination'. Of course, I didn't call my next move a combination (I didn't know what the word meant); it was simply wonderful.]

10.Ba3! I continue harassing the Black Queen. This was the very first move I considered, but because Black's last move attacked my c2-Knight, I was going to give up on this move when I spotted - by sheer luck - that the move has a deeper purpose then merely attacking Black's Queen. 10...Qxc2 Played with a near yelp of delight, my fiendish opponent wasn't about to be chivalrous and say, "Look here young Yasser, you've overlooked my threat to capture your Knight. Why don't you reconsider?" 11.Qxf8# . This stunning dénouement had an extraordinary effect on my enjoyment of chess. I was as dumbfounded as my opponent, who could only stare in helpless reflection at the final position. I had actually anticipated two moves in a row. I had consciously sacrificed a Knight in order to win back a Bishop! --- You must understand that at this stage of my chess understanding, captures came only as a result of an oversight by myself or my opponent or due to a mutually recognized immediate trade of pieces. Sometimes captures were ignored all together. This little trick caused a near explosion in my cranium. It was possible to sacrifice a piece with a higher purpose in mind! --- From this victory I deduced all the wrong lessons. Now I was more convinced then ever that I was close to solving the mystery of chess and what to do in the opening. I now believed that the key to victory was developing the Queen early in order to raid the flanks, and that in this way an early checkmate was possible. As experience would prove, I was completely wrong. --- At this time, most of my games were usually lopsided affairs where my opponents would delight in taking my entire army first, before checkmating my King! That was simply the way it was done. Most of the time, I was checkmated without the aid of any of my pieces or pawns on the board. This was another reason why the victory just described resonated so loudly: Black's very own pieces blocked Black's King from escaping. --- Thus I came to arguably the greatest pitfall for all beginners: an overwhelming fascination with the Queen's power. My concern for its wellbeing became so great that the game ceased to be interesting when Queens were traded or - worst of all - lost! Let's look at one more of my typical victories from this period. First I must confess that I wasn't entirely comfortable with White. I was unsure if I should play 1.e4 and 2.Qh5 or 2.Qf3, 1. d4 and 2.Qd3, or 1.c4 and 2.Qb3. My rate of success was pretty good with all three tries but I was dy-no-mite with the Black pieces! Witness the following epic. Black did not feel at home in the position after the opening.

My rate of success was pretty good with all three tries but I was dy-no-mite with the Black pieces! Witness the following epic.
1: Early Days-Queen Raid

[2] 13.Qd3 White is losing valuable time. He should play 13.d4 , blocking the threat to his Queen and releasing his c1-Bishop for action. 13...Re8 With another fine move, Black brings her Rook to the open e-file and creates a tactical threat. 14.h6 Filled with dreams of glory, White is oblivious to Black's threat. White should develop with 14.Ne2 , blocking the e-file. The text move is typical of inexperienced players who concentrate only on what they are doing - not what the opponent might be thinking. 14...Bf5+ A shocking double attack, the 'discovered check' by the e8-Rook doesn't allow the capture of the f5-Bishop. White is forced to lose his Queen. 15.Qe2 Rxe2+ 16.Nxe2 g6 Black won the game in 39 moves.Many lessons can be drawn from the above game fragment: Beginning players enjoy using their big guns, their Queens and Rooks, early - often to the exclusion of all the other pieces.The Queen Raid is effective when threats are overlooked.Against a proper defense, the Queen is vulnerable to attack and is often left stranded. 1: Early Days-Noble,D 3 13.Qxe5 I avoid stepping into the same ...Nd4xc2+ Knight fork, and I console myself with the thought that I have wiped out a pawn. I saw Black's next move but there was nothing I could do. 13...Re8 By pinning my Queen to my King, the cannon had never seemed more powerful! Knowing my Queen was lost, I captured the Rook. 14.Qxe8+ Qxe8+ What a disaster! My Queen is captured and my King is checked. Flustered by the suddenness of my losing position, I found my last bad move. 15.Kd1 Bxc2# My experienced opponent didn't bother to announce checkmate and instead left it to me to find a move. With my hand on my King and a puzzled expression, I tried moving my King to a few squares. When I couldn't find a square, I looked at my opponent. He gave me a knowing smile and then said, 'Checkmate.'This game left me shaking my head. After I returned home, I went over the game very carefully and came to some startling conclusions: Instead of being a bully, my Queen had actually been chased around the board, having to respond to every threat against it.While my opponent was developing his forces, I was falling behind. The final position was a forceful reminder of how lopsided the victory was. Not a single White piece had been developed. I had played 15 moves and nearly all my pieces were on their original squares. The only two pieces that had managed to make it into the game, my Queen and Bishop, had been captured.This sparked a whole new way of thinking and I discovered another principle: While an early Queen Raid against a beginner is effective, a Queen Raid will not work against an experienced opponent who knows how to coordinate pieces. Chess coaches all over the world understand this truism! Beginners are very vulnerable to Queen Raids. Once they learn how to coordinate their pieces and pawns and ward off an early Queen Raid, the strategy fails. The early development of the Queen is a detriment for the other pieces and the strategy boomerangs against the raider. 1: Early Days-Destroying The Queen Raid
